Roydon Roses in the Birthday Rose Garden are a beautiful creamy honey colour, and oh so fragrant! Bred in New Zealand, they are often not mentioned in big rose books. That's a pity!

Tiger the cat is posing on the house path in front of some pretty little daisies. She's a short-legged tortoiseshell-tabby with the sweetest cat-personality. Go, Tiger!

The gardens over the water race look splendid in their Autumn colours. They are a real mixture of red and green, spikes and leafy shrubs, and trees. This is the Dog-Path Garden.

June is a winter month, and there's not so much colour in the garden - except for the Head Gardener's trusty green wheelbarrow. This is accompanied, as always, by the beautiful white gardening cat B-Puss.

The Head Gardener can often be found hiding in shrubs or lurking on garden seats writing lists. Here she is by the Water Race surrounded by New Zealand flaxes.

There are many daffodils in the Moosey Garden, but none so cheery and welcoming as those growing on the front fence-line. Colourwise they are a mixed lot, and some are rather special.

In November the Moosey garden is possibly at its most beautiful. The lawns are usually green and lush, and the sun shines on the spiky flaxes and cordylines in the mixed borders. This is Middle Garden, and the lawn is called Duck Lawn.
